The Houses of Parliament

The British Parliament is often called 'the mother of all parliaments', because it was the first in the world. There are two houses, the House of Lords, and the House of Commons. The politicians who work in the House of Commons are called Members of Parliament (MPs).

The Palace of Westminster

The Houses of Parliament are in the Palace of Westminster. It's most famous for Big Ben (this is the name of the bell inside the clock, not the name of the tower). The palace was first built for King Edward the Confessor in 1050 and now has more than 1,100 rooms on four floors, and over 100 staircases. There is also a hairdresser's, a pub, a gym and a post office.

The House of Commons

In the big chamber* here, the MPs sit on green benches. The government MPs sit on one side, and the other MPs opposite. The leader of the House is called the Speaker, and he has a special chair in the middle. There are 650 MPs, but only 427 places to sit, so on busy days over 200 MPs stand, sometimes for hours.

3. Answer the question: . Make a speech about good features of humanity (politeness, friendship, kindness, respects).

Card 9

1. . Make a speech about: My working day.

2. Read the text and retell it in English:

In front of the green benches there are two red lines, with 2.5 metres between them – the length of two swords. MPs can't cross these lines, so they can only fight with words! The King or Queen can never enter the chamber of the House of Commons, only the House of Lords.

Speaker's House

The Speaker is the only person who lives in Westminster Palace, in Speaker's House. This is under Big Ben. Downstairs there's a living room, and two big dining rooms, and an amazing bed the King or Queen can sleep in! They never do! Upstairs there's a modern apartment, with four bedrooms.

Interesting note

Not many people know this, but under the Speaker's Chair in the House of Commons there is a toilet! It has curtains that you can pull around it! In the past, it was there for the Speaker when the business of the day was very long. Of course, the Speaker doesn't use it today!

HEDY LAMARR
The Hollywood film star behind the invention of Wi-fi and mobile phones.

The Austrian actress Hedy Lamarr was born in Vienna in 1914, as Hedwig Kiesler. She was a very clever girl, always interested in how things worked – she loved taking her music boxes to pieces and putting them together again.

However, she also loved acting, so she left school early without qualifications and started drama school.

Hedy the film star
Hedwig first worked in Czechoslovakian films, and she quickly became a successful actress, often called 'the most beautiful woman in the world'. She married in 1933, but her husband didn't want her to work, and kept her locked in the house.

Finally, in 1937, she ran away to Paris. There she met an American film producer, and under her new name, Hedy Lamarr, she was soon a famous Hollywood actress.

Hedy's problem was that she soon got bored with film roles that were just about being beautiful. She didn't enjoy Hollywood parties, and liked to spend her free time inventing things.

Wartime work
During World War II, she had an idea for making it difficult for the Germans to stop American radio signals. She was the first person to think of sending bits of information on different radio waves, and then putting them together when they arrived – like a jigsaw. Sadly, the US Navy didn't take her seriously.

No one understood how important Hedy's work was until many years later, and not many people know that it is her idea that makes Wi-fi and mobile phones possible today. She died in 2000. In 2015, Google told her story in one of their 'doodles' on her birthday.

ROSALIND FRANKLIN

The scientist who didn't get the Nobel Prize for discovering the structure of DNA.

The British scientist Rosalind Franklin was born in London in 1920. She was a very intelligent girl, and did maths exercises in her free time because she loved it! She went to Cambridge University, where she worked very hard studying Chemistry. However, she didn't actually get a degree when she finished her course – this was in 1938, and at that time only men could receive degrees.

Finding her place

Her first job was in a laboratory in Paris, where she took X-ray photographs of chemicals to learn more about their structure. She enjoyed living in France, and spent her free time walking in the mountains. When she went back to London in 1951, she worked with the scientist Maurice Wilkins in Kings College, and began studying DNA.

Her problem was working with male scientists – they often didn't take female scientists seriously. Wilkins wanted Franklin to be his assistant, and when she wanted to do her own work, he called her a 'dark lady'. In the evenings, Franklin couldn't eat in the same college dining room as the men.

Discovering DNA

Franklin's work went well, and she was the first person to show DNA's structure in a photograph. Wilkins showed the photo and her work to two other scientists, James Watson and Frances Crick – he did this without asking Franklin. When Watson and Crick later won the Nobel Prize for discovering the structure of DNA, they didn't say that Franklin's work was very important in their discovery.

Rosalind died of cancer in 1958, probably because of all her work with X-rays. In 2013, on her birthday, Google told her story in one of their 'doodles'.

'WHO INVENTED ICE CREAM?'

There is no sure answer to this question. Perhaps it was the Chinese in 200 BC – they used ice to freeze rice with milk. Perhaps it was Alexander the Great, or the Roman Emperor Nero AD 37–68 – they both liked snow flavoured with fruit and honey.

13TH CENTURY CHINA > ITALY

In 1269, Marco Polo travelled to East Asia. He returned home 24 years later with many 'Marvels of the World', including a recipe for ice cream from China. So, the Italians became the first people in Europe to enjoy this luxury.

16TH – 17TH CENTURY ITALY > FRANCE > ENGLAND

Italian noblewoman, Catherine de Medici, was a great fan of ice cream. In 1533, she married Henri II of France and introduced him to the delicious dessert. Later, Charles I of England became an ice cream fan when his French chef made it for a royal banquet. He called it 'cream ice' and paid his chef £500 to keep the recipe secret. However, in 1665 it appeared in an English cookery book by Lady Anne Fanshawe. She called it 'Icy cream'.

For many years, ice cream was a luxury, enjoyed only by royalty and the rich. It wasn't until 1686 that ice cream first appeared on a restaurant menu. A Sicilian, Procopio dei Coltelli, opened the Café Procope in Paris and introduced Italian Gelato. It was made of milk, cream, butter and eggs – more like the ice cream we know today.

The House of Commons

In the big chamber* here, the MPs sit on green benches. The government MPs sit on one side, and the other MPs opposite. The leader of the House is called the Speaker, and he has a special chair in the middle. There are 650 MPs, but only 427 places to sit, so on busy days over 200 MPs stand, sometimes for hours.

In front of the green benches there are two red lines, with 2.5 metres between them – the length of two swords. MPs can't cross these lines, so they can only fight with words! The King or Queen can never enter the chamber of the House of Commons, only the House of Lords.

Speaker's House

The Speaker is the only person who lives in Westminster Palace, in Speaker's House. This is under Big Ben. Downstairs there's a living room, and two big dining rooms, and an amazing bed the King or Queen can sleep in! They never do! Upstairs there's a modern apartment, with four bedrooms.

Interesting note

Not many people know this, but under the Speaker's Chair in the House of Commons there is a toilet! It has curtains that you can pull around it! In the past, it was there for the Speaker when the business of the day was very long. Of course, the Speaker doesn't use it today!

HEDY LAMARR
The Hollywood film star behind the invention of Wi-fi and mobile phones.

The Austrian actress Hedy Lamarr was born in Vienna in 1914, as Hedwig Kiesler. She was a very clever girl, always interested in how things worked – she loved taking her music boxes to pieces and putting them together again.

However, she also loved acting, so she left school early without qualifications and started drama school.

Hedy the film star
Hedwig first worked in Czechoslovakian films, and she quickly became a successful actress, often called 'the most beautiful woman in the world'. She married in 1933, but her husband didn't want her to work, and kept her locked in the house.

Finally, in 1937, she ran away to Paris. There she met an American film producer, and under her new name, Hedy Lamarr, she was soon a famous Hollywood actress.

Hedy's problem was that she soon got bored with film roles that were just about being beautiful. She didn't enjoy Hollywood parties, and liked to spend her free time inventing things.

Wartime work
During World War II, she had an idea for making it difficult for the Germans to stop American radio signals. She was the first person to think of sending bits of information on different radio waves, and then putting them together when they arrived – like a jigsaw. Sadly, the US Navy didn't take her seriously.

No one understood how important Hedy's work was until many years later, and not many people know that it is her idea that makes Wi-fi and mobile phones possible today. She died in 2000. In 2015, Google told her story in one of their 'doodles' on her birthday.

ROSALIND FRANKLIN

The scientist who didn't get the Nobel Prize for discovering the structure of DNA.

The British scientist Rosalind Franklin was born in London in 1920. She was a very intelligent girl, and did maths exercises in her free time because she loved it! She went to Cambridge University, where she worked very hard studying Chemistry. However, she didn't actually get a degree when she finished her course – this was in 1938, and at that time only men could receive degrees.

Finding her place

Her first job was in a laboratory in Paris, where she took X-ray photographs of chemicals to learn more about their structure. She enjoyed living in France, and spent her free time walking in the mountains. When she went back to London in 1951, she worked with the scientist Maurice Wilkins in Kings College, and began studying DNA.

Her problem was working with male scientists – they often didn't take female scientists seriously. Wilkins wanted Franklin to be his assistant, and when she wanted to do her own work, he called her a 'dark lady'. In the evenings, Franklin couldn't eat in the same college dining room as the men.

Discovering DNA

Franklin's work went well, and she was the first person to show DNA's structure in a photograph. Wilkins showed the photo and her work to two other scientists, James Watson and Frances Crick – he did this without asking Franklin. When Watson and Crick later won the Nobel Prize for discovering the structure of DNA, they didn't say that Franklin's work was very important in their discovery.

Rosalind died of cancer in 1958, probably because of all her work with X-rays. In 2013, on her birthday, Google told her story in one of their 'doodles'.
